Participation in the "1st National Skills Competition"

The 1st National Skills Competition was held in Tokyo in May. From 5 events, 8 engineers who cleared the in-house tournament and district tournament participated in the competition, and 4 of whom won the prize including bronze medal. The National Skills Competition is an event where young Japanese engineers nationwide (under the age of 23) compete against each other in a variety of skills according to their occupations. As a result of repeated trial and error by training and coaching and continuous attempts in the tournaments, DENSO produced its first gold medalist in the "Milling Occupational Category" of the national competition in 1971. The company won its first gold medal at the international meet in the Netherlands in 1977.
